Paper-III: Ancient Indian Historiography

(Total Marks: 100) 4 Credits
Written Exam. : 80 marks
Internal Assessment : 20 marks
Time: 3 hours

Objective: This paper is divided into four units. It deals with the historiographical analysis. The first unit deals with the Imperialist writings of the 18th and 19th centuries on ancient India. The writings of these scholars were rooted in a colonial context. The second unit incorporates the works of some of the Indian scholars of late 19th and 20th centuries who are referred to as Nationalist historians. They meticulously culled data from varied sources to amplify the contours of ancient Indian past and revised some of the arguments put forth by the Imperialist historians. The third unit deals with the Marxist historiography. They shifted their focus from history merely as a political narrative of Indian past to the delineation of social and economic structures and processes. Critical understanding of these three units shall not only help us to know their contributions but also limitations of past and present, ideological and theoretical frame work which is essential to understand where ancient Indian history stands today. Recent trends in historical research forms the fourth unit of this paper. Two emerging thrust areas i.e. regional history and bio-ethics shall be studied in this unit.

Note: The course shall consist of four units. The examiner shall set a total of eight questions with two questions being set in each unit. Candidate shall answer one question from each unit. All questions carry equal marks.
