SO-702: Research Methodology

Objective

This course has been devised to equip the students with the necessary expertise for carrying out their Theses, by selecting and employing methodologically correct theoretical perspectives, tools and techniques. Another objective of this course is to keep the students updated with the emerging methodological issues and techniques. The course will acclimatize the students with the practical process of designing field research, apart from the appropriate use of statistical methods and computer software for data analysis and interpretation.

Course Content

Unit I

Epistemological and Methodological Issues in Social Science Research – (a) Positivistic versus Interpretive Perspective: Major Assumptions and Methodological Implications; (b) Quantitative versus Qualitative Methodology; (c) Pure and Applied Research; Action Research

Unit II

Conceptualization and Operationalization (Practical Exercises) – (a) Sampling: Choosing a sampling method; probability, non-probability and theoretical sampling (Practical Exercises); (b) Triangulation; Mixing Quantitative and Qualitative Methodology (Practical Exercises); (c) Interdisciplinary Research in Social Sciences: Rationale and Significance

Unit III

Methods of Data Collection – (a) Qualitative and Quantitative; Criteria for Choosing appropriate method/s for your study; Combining Methods (Practical Exercises); (b) Conducting Ethnographic research; Using Narratives; Doing Naturalistic Inquiry; Conducting Focused Group Discussions (Practical Exercises); (c) Data Processing and Analysis: Quantitative and Qualitative; Qualitative Coding

Unit IV

Selection and Formulation of Research Problem under Quantitative and Qualitative Research Proposal – (a) Developing Theoretical Framework for Research (Practical Exercises); (b) Hypothesis: Writing a good and testable hypothesis (Practical Exercises); (c) Research Synopsis: Format, Writing a good synopsis (Practical Exercises); (d) Writing a thesis: Ingredients; language; presentation

SO-703: Seminar Course

Objective

The objective of this paper is to a) train the candidate in the art of writing a seminar paper along the lines of a mini-dissertation and to face a viva voce test and b) to train the candidate in the art of writing book reviews

Course Content

This is a 4 Credit course carrying 100 marks. The topic of the paper and the books to be reviewed can be decided by the candidate in consultation with the dissertation supervisor.

SO-704: Education and Modernization

Objective

The Course will provide a critical appraisal of the role of education as an agency of modernization in the developing countries with particular focus on the relationship between education and individual modernity in India. The pertinent question of this course is not whether or not education promotes modernity, but what is it about education that promotes modernity, under what conditions and how? The students are expected to have knowledge of the social functions of education and the interrelations of education and social change.

Course Content

Unit I

The Concept of Modernization

Issues in the Conceptualization of Modernization: Unit, Model, Direction, Convergence, Uniformitarianism and Universals

Societal Modernity and Individual Modernity: Conceptions and Measures

Unit II

Education as a Modernizing Agent

Education and Economic Development, Education and Individual Modernity –Theoretical Perspectives and Empirical Generalizations

Unit III

Education and Student Modernity in India

Aspects of Education and Student Modernity – Spread, Level, Type, Curriculum, Teacher, Extracurricular Activities, Residence in Hostel; Education and Modernization in India

Unit IV

Role of Education in Developing Societies

Emerging Critical Appraisals of the Role of Education in Developing Societies; Education in the era of globalization and education; Postmodernism and education

SO-706: Demographic and Health Transition in India

Objective

Rapid transition is taking place in demographic and health sectors in India. From the mid 70s state wise variations in major demographic components-fertility, mortality, age-structure; and health components- morbidity patterns, health and family welfare services and practices, reproductive and child health care, RTI/STI and HIV show interesting patterns. Some regions have progressed remarkably well in the past, as few are rapidly catching up, while others which had been considered 'sick' (BIMARU) in the past are showing promising results. The emerging picture overall indicates that in several areas there are unexpected changes in fertility, mortality and health components of populations, while in others, the pace of change is slow but noticeable. The focus of this course will be to study the transitions in fertility, mortality and health sectors in India, identify the linkages inducing such changes and study the future trends and consequences of these transitions.

Course Content

Unit-I

Demographic and Health Transition:

Theoretical Perspectives and Critical Review of Relevant Literature

Population Growth in India, Micro level and Interstate Variations

Past Trends, Current Levels and Future Scenario

Unit-II

Fertility Transition- National and State Levels:

Common Experience and Distinctive Patterns: The transition will be examined through several measures of fertility and reproduction. Existing explanatory models and linkages would be critically examined. In the light of new evidence, search for explanations will be carried through examining the specificity in fertility transition at the regional/state levels.

Unit-III

Mortality Transition- National and State Levels:

Common Experience and Distinctive Patterns: The transition will be examined through several measures of mortality-CDR, age specific mortality rates (${}_nq_x$), and life expectancy (e^Ox) and cause of death. Existing explanatory models and linkages would be critically examined in the light of new evidence of mortality patterns at the regional/state levels. Search for explanations will be carried through examining the specificity in mortality transition.

Unit-IV

Health Transition:

National and State Levels: Common Experience and Distinctive Patterns. The transition will be examined through changes in the morbidity patterns by age, sex and residence. Existing explanatory models and linkages would be critically examined in the light of new evidence of morbidity patterns at the regional/state levels. Special attention will be given to discuss the RTI/STI and HIV.

SO-713: Patterns of Urbanization in Developing Countries with Special Reference to Asia and Africa

Objective

All the major perspectives in Urban Sociology so far, have been formulated on the basis of western experience. The recent trends in urbanization and social change in developing countries, however, call for the need to develop alternative models to understand the patterns of urbanization in these societies, which no doubt, are significantly different from those experienced by the west. The present course, therefore, will familiarize the student with the existing perspectives on urban sociology and help to evaluate their relevance in the emerging trends of urban societies in developing countries, especially the Asian and the African.

Course Content

Unit-I

Existing theoretical orientations to urban sociology: demographic approach, Ecological approach, Technological approach, and Social disorganization approach.

Unit-II

Emerging pattern of urbanization in developing countries (with special reference to Asia and Africa): a historical sketch of urbanization and evolution of city in African and Asian societies, urbanization in colonial situation

Unit-III

Demographic transformation: Trends of migration, Rural-urban differences in demographic variables.

Unit-IV

Socio-cultural transformation in urban setting: Family, Kinship, Ethnicity, Stratification, Neighbourhood; Urbanization and urbanism – Social change in urban societies; Urbanism as a way of life; Relevance of folk-urban continuum perspective
